Pop

Sir,
HOW happy it is for Mankind, that the Divine author of Nature has graciously bestowed to each of us, organs of perception nearly similar. In consequence, no two Men with their eyes open will dispute that this paper is not white, or that the letters are not black: or with respect to feeling, whether Iron is hard or soft. -- The sense of hearing is no less uniform: we are pleased with harmony, vexed by discord. How then can you account for the amazing variety of sentiments and opinions which pervade the human race: will you have any objection to the solution given by my favorite author above quoted, or do you not think that if Mr. Pope had said nothing on the subject, the various able Statesmen, sound politicians, not to say one word of infallible Divines met already in Kentucke might have been full sufficient to have convinced you, or have drawn from you some similar observation. If you will believe them, Sir, they are all right, and yet most assuredly nearly all must be wrong. Naturalists have taken notice of above three hundred sorts of Mo's: I make no doubt there are twice as many sorts of mind; but, Sir, among the infinite variety (for every man differs in some degree) it is necessary for the sake of plain conception and in order to inspect the leading principles to throw the various kinds into different classes, and then, Sir, like a good General, you see at one view the several Brigadier Battalions and Companies; you see the manœuvring the marcher and counter marcher, and if you can only find out the principal actors, and the principles of action, you will easily account for all the rest. I shall only Sir, at present enumerate some few of the classes, reserving the others for your future amusement as I shall judge you deserve it.

I select then the following. The Pompous. The Humily Specious. The Believing Inve-tive. The Serious. The Candid; and last and worst of all the SNEAKING CLASS. -- The heads of these classes are easily distinguished, they are fond Sir, of being seen and known and for that purpose are sure to court your favor that by your means they may appear in public, or else, they will mount stumps, or wagons, and address the people vis a vis. For instance a card in your paper No. VI is a strong proof of the Pompous, it speaks thus. I was fir, a whig in the worst of times--I was fir, a -- I am fir, a-- but with all submission (that is to say with no submission at all) you Sir, have neither relations, property, or credit, in short Sir, you are a flatterer, and a mere nobody this passes too as I shall shew hereafter of the SNEAKING CLASS. I am sorry the Complainer has discovered a superior rank in the second class, I hope, however, he will reform quit his company, and join with the candid.

Thenext in order is the Believing Inve-tive. The greatest commander I ever knew, belonging to this Class, was a certain Juxite who could pelt and bedaub the Enemy with vast dexterity, he would advance his whole force--lay on unmercifully, and then, at pleasure would either leave the poor Devils half murdered, or if he thought proper smite the wounds instantly, with a soft kind of plaster readily accepted by the patient. Porticota was certainly tutored by Juxite, but it is equally certain he has been a backward scholar and though he possesses the believing five, yet he wants the manner and the address of his great master. Observe Sir, his second attack on the Complainer; like an unskillful Surgeon, he has laid open the wrong wound, and hacked it much,-- has cut too deep,-- and what is worse than all has applied no healing salve,-- left it bare,-- exposed it to unnecessary view, and indeed Porticota (whoever you are for I know you not) you have gained no credit.

The SERIOUS CLASS is that which does honor to mankind; it is with pleasure I discover them, the outward garb Sir, is easily known, but if I am not much mistaken PHILOPATRIA possesses it inwardly and a Genius of the same stamp is only raised when he addresses the Complainer under the signature of a Fellow Citizen. Those of this Class must, however, proceed cautiously, perfection is not to be expected, and yet much is expected, for if they inadvertently step aside, or if pleased with the Pompous they throw away the Serious, the end of such characters will be contemptible. I come now to THE CANDID, and in this class there is likewise contained those who do honor to the species. It is mostly composed of the young, and middle aged, for you may observe, Sir, multitudes as they advance in years quit their rank and join with the serious: others are pleased with the Pompous, and some few will even fall back and degrade both themselves and all their Connections by joining with the sneaking class. A peculiar cheerfulness of mind, liberality of sentiment and universal Philanthropy are the characteristics of the Candid, and those of all others are most to be respected who have a command in this class commissioned by PARDENCE. But alas Sir, how few attain to this exalted station. Not the FARMER, nor the WAGERER; nor thou O Brutus!

I will now condescend to take notice of the SNEAKING CLASS. I hope there are but few in this Country: for these of all others are, to be sure, made up of persons the most mean and contemptible of the whole Human species. I should have informed you Sir, (tho I make no doubt but you might often have observed it) that this Class is never permitted to be in rank with any others; they want courage to be in front, and are of too sinking quality, to be close in the rear. In consequence, they sneak behind, and follow Mankind like to many Monkeys. They often lay in ambush and what renders them truly contemptible, take advantage of the candid Man and without making themselves known throw Anecdotes, Cards and Squibs, not possessing the common feelings of humanity. They will defame a virtuous Character, tell lies,-- or in short, go any lengths, provided they can do it sneakingly, and the whole is carried on without the least tincture of sensibility. The Publisher of an Anecdote in your Paper No. VI is without doubt commander in chief of the sneaking Class, tho he deserves credit for the pretty luscious Pory he has given us of the WOOD-EN STILL. I should not have known but for this circumstance, who he alluded to by the appellation of CRAZY JEM. As I have undertaken Sir, a critical review of your late Publications, I must make some remarks on this said Anecdote and its anonymous Author. Such a low liv'd, mean, pitiful way of informing the Public of the adventures of Crazy Jem and his Wooden Still, is truly contemptible. Thou dark Ab-Sin! Thou sneaking thing! Thou drop of Matter! Thou Child of dirt! You call forth my indignation not for the Subject for it is laughable but for the manner. Thou creeping reptile! Thou Torporific Eel how couldst thou find courage to ask what had become of the women STILL? thou knowest it was stolen Wood and all from your underhanded, unmanly, unmannerly, your Sly, sneaking, pitiful blackguard, grovelling, dirty, premeditated, unprovoked attack upon poor Jem and his Still I am convinced YOU MUST BE THE THIEF. Ten Dollars have been offered as a reward and to do Jem a kindness, if you will RETURN it I will be security the money shall be paid you, and if possible no questions asked.

But Mr. Printer I will view the said Anecdote in another light you Sir must see it, every candid Man must see it as a meer miserable subterfuge to undermine the sentiments of a person, whose fears were justly alarmed at the proceedings of the last Convention and the Amiable Political power recommended to be given to the next. A person who has and always will flee forth when he perceives the welfare of his Country endangered by any unjustifiable encroachments of power and will candidly and openly (tho perhaps immediately) declare his sentiments to the World without dreading the censure of any Man. I am further Authorized to invite our COMMANDER IN CHIEF

I am Mr. Printer
yours &c.

TO POPULICOLA

This great writer can tell us now that this law does not affect us; that it was made for the people at Missouri, as if a law which declares it to be true for any people to fit up a Government within the limits of Virginia, without the assent of the Legislature, does not affect us in Kentucky, although we are part of Virginia, who seem to take the liberty to say what you please whether true or falsehood, what is it you would not say to bind the understanding of the public, if you could thereby offend your deities. Thus the sects, Ballistics and phantoms of your's here will not frighten me out of my true policy, I hope virtue and decency will stay

An Inhabitant of KENTUCKE.

THAT wife's some person, his real name and place of abode to us is unknown, have published two pieces in the Kentucky Gazette, calling himself as we suppose in a seditious manner) a Complanter, as thinking or looking upon that occupation bell suited, or at least have pointed that met to cloke his ignorance, but in doing he have brought our occupation to shame and disgrace, we do not expect unless that booby of a Complanter can be flogged, ever to retrieve our former credit again; it is now become a bye word, that when any thing is laid or done foolishly, the answer is, "why you are as great a fool as the Complanter." The consequence is, that a number is turned Tobacco-planters, rather than undergo such disgrace any longer: in justification of ourselves we dare say that he hath to his own acknowledgment changed files already, that being the case, he is more likely to be a Powdermaker, a Chimney sweeper or a Blue dyer, sooner than a Complanter. He goes still farther, and says, we may expect to hear from him a third, fourth and fifth time, if that's to be the case, we humbly pray that he may come forth in his true colours. Now the humble prayer of your petitioners is, that some capable persons from your judicious body may stand forth, and endeavour to bury the quack of a Complanter's name in oblivion; And your Petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray.

On Friday last, as several men with teams together with some pack horses were travelling to Limestone, a party of about 5 Indians who were in ambush fired on them about two miles and a half from the blue licks, Mr. Latta, one of the company was killed and six horses taken. The next day the same party killed a man near Limestone.

A Young man that can write a good hand, is well versed in Book-keeping and Accompts, and can be well recommended: Inquire of the Printer.

The foul then, as instructed from above,
Soon as it quits its lifeless clay-cola corse,
Mounts on the borrow'd silver plumes of heav'n,
Thro' chequ'ring clouds, and soars above the stars.
But oh! who dare inquire its fate decreed?
For Heav'n that knowledge interdicts to man,
And stupifies the busy, wand'ring sense,
That may attempt this secret to explore.

It is said that Frederick was an excellent judge of men, and knew perfectly well how to appreciate their merits. Nevertheless, a great many instances may be mentioned, in which he was mistaken. Before the celebrated General Laudon entered into the army of the late Empress Queen, he offered his services to Frederick. "I do not like that man's countenance," said the King and rejected him. He had reason to repent of it.

ABOUT the twenty fourth Inst. at night, the Gaol door of Fayette County was broke open, by which means fundry prisoners have eſcaped. I will give the above reward to any perſon or perſons that will give information who the offenders are, ſo that ſuch incendiaries may be brought to puniſhment. The above reward will be given when the Felony is convicted. R. PATTERSON. Sheriff.
